Fable for Another Time (French: Féerie pour une autre fois) is a 1952 novel by the French writer Louis-Ferdinand Céline. The narrative recounts Céline's experiences during what seems to be a hypothetical bombing of an area of Montmartre by the allies on the days preceding D-day. The whole of the action of this fairly long narrative lasts no more than twelve hours from the beginning of an evening to the morning after.

Fable for Another Time is one of the most significant and far-reaching literary texts of postwar France. Composed in the tumultuous aftermath of World War II, largely in the Danish prison cell where the author was awaiting extradition to France on charges of high treason, the book offers a unique perspective on the war, the postwar political purges in France, and Louis-Ferdinand Céline's own dissident politics.

This looks like a good translation of the French original, but I don't get the English title. FEERIE POUR UNE AUTRE FOIS--okay "for Another Time", but why "Fable"? FEERIE, as Vitoux points out, had a special meaning for Celine, and it seems to me that "Fantasy" or "Fantasmagoria" would be a better rendering.
