Shaker style doors add a simple and clean look to your cabinets and add a level of true craftsmanship to your cabinet project. Other than the hinges there is no metal, just wood and glue. And if you are starting with wood that is already surfaced and squared, then you can build the entire door with just a table saw and miter saw.

The Shaker style maybe be very traditional but that's not to say it can't totally be adapted to work in a modern space. The sage green cabinetry combined with the quartz worktop has brought this kitchen right up to date. And then there's the smaller details like the super modern lights, stylish house plants and those Crittall-style doors. Love it!

A shaker style kitchen is typically one that has cabinets and doors with recessed panels — a framed profile sometimes referred to as “ rail and stile ” . The shaker door was traditionally made with a 5-piece door front, two rails, two stiles and a central panel. It was strong and there was little wasted timber.
