In 1524 and 1525, seven years after Martin Luther began the Reformation, Erasmus of Rotterdam (1466–1536) and Luther held a “debate” in print entitled On Free Will and Salvation. Erasmus initiated this exchange in the form of an open letter in early 1524, and Luther replied in 1525. Erasmus, despite his own criticisms of the excesses and corruption of many Roman Catholic clergymen, felt that the Church was absolutely necessary.

Erasmus and Luther on Free Will and Salvation

On the Bondage of the Will, by Martin Luther, was published in December 1525. It was his reply to Desiderius Erasmus' De libero arbitrio diatribe sive collatio or On Free Will, which had appeared in September 1524 as Erasmus' first public attack on Luther. At issue was whether human beings, after the Fall of Man, are free to choose good or evil. The debate between Luther and Erasmus is one of the earliest of the Reformation over the issue of free will and predestination. On the Bondage of the Wi

Erasmus and Luther: The Battle over Free Will edited by Clarence H. Miller, translated by Clarence H. Miller and Peter Macardle. Indianapolis: Hackett Publishing Company, 2012. Summary: This work is a compilation of the argument between Erasmus and Luther over the place of free will and grace in salvation, excluding most of the supporting exegesis but giving the gist of the argument.

Luther and Erasmus: Free Will and Salvation by Erasmus

Erasmus defended the will's autonomy, arguing that even after the fall man's will is free to resist divine grace or cooperate with it. For example, Erasmus defines free will as “a power of the human will by which a man can apply himself to the things which lead to eternal salvation or turn away from them.” Martin Luther Martyn McGeown. Erasmus' On the Freedom of the Will (FW), otherwise known as the Diatribe, does not make a strong case for his thesis that man's will has a power whereby he can choose good. 1 Erasmus proceeds with caution, approaching the subject with hesitancy. There is evidence that he did not relish writing the book.
