The Shang Han Lun (Treatise on Cold-Induced Disorders) is a seminal text of TCM, written approximately 200 CE by Zhang Zhong Jing. It effectively describes the progress of a pathogen from the exterior of the body (skin) down into the interior (internal organs). It proposes that Cold, and deficient Yang Qi (Body heat) are the initial cause of acute diseases.

The Shang Han Lun (On Cold Damage) is among the oldest surviving, the most copiously annotated and the most revered of Chinas traditional medical texts. Of all of Chinas early medical classics, the Shang Han Lun is undoubtedly the one with the greatest relevance to the modern practice of Chinese medicine, and the one most deserving of Western attention. It was the first book to attempt to incorporate medicinal therapy into the medicine of systematic correspondences and channels and network vessels. Far ahead of its time in both theory and practice, it is not surprising that the prescriptions it contains comprise an important part of todays medicinal formulary.

A major new translation of the Chinese classic Shang Han Lun by scholar and medical doctor Guohui Liu makes this foundational text fully accessible to English speaking clinicians for the first time. Extensive study and research underpins the translation; the author's understanding of both classical and modern Chinese enables him to interpret fully the ancient work within the theory of Chinese medicine. An extensive commentary explains the translation, the difficulties with the text, how it has been subsequently translated and expands on the theory laid out in the original text to reach an understanding that can be applied in the clinic for diagnosis and treatment. The value of this classic text lies primarily in its establishment of a basic framework for differentiation and treatment, but it also presents 112 formulas and 88 medicinal substances, which are commonly applied in clinical work for various conditions. In this edition, the 112 formulas are fully explained in the context of the clinical experiences of well-known ancient and modern doctors, and they are also laid out in two appendices, cross referenced to the text.

The book points out the three yang meridian's pathogen is mainly foreign weather wind-cold damaging defense yang, gallbladder yang and stomach yang qi condition. The three yin meridian's pathogen is mainly internal heat or dry heat damaging yang qi and yin fluid condition. This book discusses all six meridian's individual information together and separately such as: outline, basic patterns, organ's patterns, basic pattern's additional symptoms, organ's pattern's additional symptoms, transmuted patterns, and combination diseases. This book point out Tai Yin directly attacking by cold pathogen-Li Zhong Tang pattern is belonging to Foot Yang Ming stomach. The Foot Yang Ming-Bai Hu Tang Fu pattern is belonging to Tai Yin spleen pattern. This book also introduces the most important lines from the Shang Han Lun. The most important part of this book points out: Shang Han Lun is not just focus to the cold pathogen issues and focus to nourish yang qi. The Shang Han Lun also focus to the heat pathogen issues and focus to clearing the heat. Shang Lun is not just focus to the dampness pathogen issues and focus to clearing the dampness; Shang Han Lun also focus to the dryness pathogen and focus to nourish yin to reduces the dryness.

The history of Chinese medicine hinges on three major turning points: the formation of canonical theory in the Han dynasty; the transformation of medicine via the integration of earlier medical theories and practices in the Song dynasty; and the impact of Western medicine from the nineteenth century onwards. This book offers a comprehensive overview of the crucial second stage in the evolution of Chinese medicine by examining the changes in Chinese medicine during the pivotal era of the Song dynasty. Scholars often characterize the Song era as a time of change in every aspect of political, social, intellectual or economic life. More specifically it focuses on three narratives of change: the emperor's interest

Shang Han Lun was written in approx 200 AD and remains a seminal text in Chinese medicine literature and is mandatory study in all accredited courses of Chinese medicine today. It analyses the aetiology and pathogenesis of acute upper respiratory tract infections (the common cold, influenza, bronchitis, asthma) and describes the many permutations as well as subsequent complications. It is not just a study of coughs and colds but lays the groundwork for Chinese medical theory and its strategies of treatment. It also explains the consequences of incorrect treatment and discusses how the omission or addition of even one herb to a formula can affect its efficacy. This is the book that makes understanding a complex classic text easy. Greta Young benefits the reader with her years of expertise in studying and lecturing in the classics and guides us through the myriad clauses elucidating their meaning, citing points of discussion from various sources and illustrating their application with modifications and case studies. Robin Marchment has translated each clause in a way which is faithful to the original Chinese whilst still making the meaning accessible to the English-speaker. The explanations and discussions use clear English in a free-flowing lecturing style which holds the reader's interest. Each chapter or section is introduced with an overview, key points are highlighted and summarised at the end and, in addition, both Ancient Applications and Modern Applications are described. The objective is to make it interesting, readable and of practical clinical significance to today's practitioners.

Chinese herbal therapy has different styles. The most commonly applied styles are Conventional herbal formula style and Classical herbal formula style. For the former is the one taught in TCM school and the latter, is only briefly introduced in school. It is said that the former system is easy to learn in school but hard to have high effective healing level in later clinic practice. The latter style of TCM is based on book Shanghan Lun, which is difficulty to learn in beginning but has higher healing effect in later clinic practice. There are many reasons for this. In our book here, we introduce the opinions of many current TCM doctors for their understanding of the Shanghan Lun. We hope that, by learning from the different TCM experts, the beginners can quickly move into the gate of Classical herbal system and become real expert in TCM practice.

The Mai Jing or Pulse Classic was written in the late Han dynasty by Wang Shu-he. It is the first book in the Chinese medical literature entirely devoted to pulse diagnosis. As such, it is the undeniable and necessary foundation text for anyone seriously interested in understanding the rationale for and method of reading the pulse in Chinese medicine. Although not an easy read, this book is a mine of valuable information for those wishing to go more deeply into a study of the pulse.

Discussion of Cold Damage (Shang Han Lun) and contemporary texts of ancient China form the bedrock of modern Chinese medicine practice, yet these classic texts contain many concepts that are either hard to understand or confusing. Based on over thirty years' medical practice, and study of the texts, this book explains the concepts involved so that the clinical applications of the ancient texts can be better understood and put into practice. The author looks at the larger context of ancient Chinese culture and philosophy in terms of theoretical knowledge, scholarly approach, and mindset in order to explain the basis for the medical texts. He also discusses the work of later Chinese medical scholars in elucidating the texts. He then goes on to look at more specific issues, such as the six conformations, zang-fu organ theory, the theory of qi and blood, the theory of qi transformation, and how these are understood in the ancient texts. He also discusses shao yang and tai yang theory; the element of time, and its place in understanding six conformations diseases. This remarkable work of scholarship will clarify many questions about the interpretation of the ancient texts for modern use, and will find a place on the bookshelf of every practitioner of Chinese medicine, as well as on those of scholars of Chinese medicine.
