Synchronicity is an unlikely or impossible coincidence that cannot be explained by luck or chance. It is also a prophecy, a predictor of the future. When you are in sync with the “thing” that you want, you are much more likely to meet that “thing.” That is why similar people always seem to meet; they are tuned to the same frequency.

The term “synchronicity” was first coined by Dr. Carl Jung to describe the concept of meaningful coincidences. Inspired by classical Chinese texts (such as the Tao Te Ching), Gottfried Leibniz’s monadology, astrology, and quantum mechanics, Jung first introduced the concept in the 1920s. Over the years, he continued to refine the concept and published a paper on the subject in 1952, titled Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle.

Synchronicity means moving-together-in-time. Its fundamental characteristic is the surprise that occurs when a thought in the mind is mirrored by an external event to which it has no apparent causal connection.
